How did the Fund perform during the reporting period?

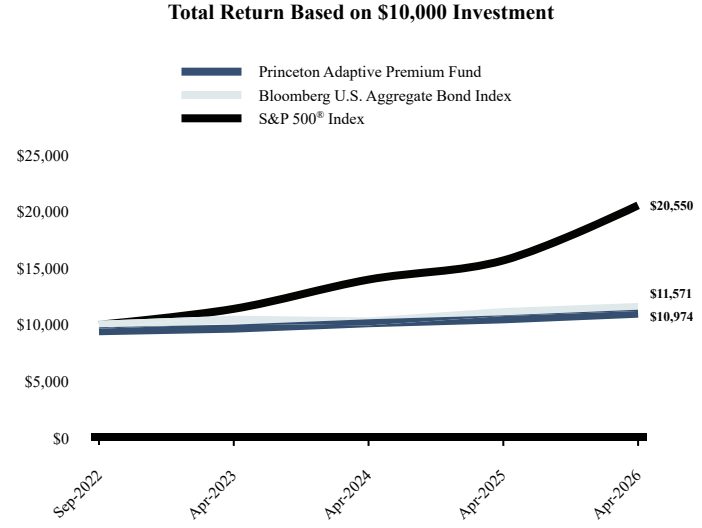

The Princeton Adaptive Premium Fund Class A Shares ("Fund") returned +4.76% during the fiscal year ended April 30, 2026 (the "Investment Period"). The Fund seeks capital appreciation and income by attempting to collect premium each week through the sale of put options on the S&P 500 (SPX) that have approximately a six-to-eight day or less time frame to expiration. The Fund employs a rules-based system that is replicated weekly. Trades are typically placed at multiple times throughout the week. The options-based strategy seeks to generate a weekly profit. Tactical portfolio management overlays are used to help potentially mitigate volatility. The Fund also invests in fixed income securities.

The Fund's option trading strategy was profitable in 11 out of the 12 months during the Investment Period. The Fund's investments in fixed income, which consisted primarily of 90-Day Treasury Bills, contributed positively to performance throughout the Investment Period.

Volatility during the Investment Period was primarily driven by geopolitical developments. Ongoing developments in the tariff war following "Liberation Day" in April 2025 provided several spikes in the VIX throughout the year. The largest move was in October 2025 when, on 10/10/25, the VIX increased 32% (from 16.43 to 21.66) following a post from President Donald Trump on social media that he would be imposing additional tariffs on China. The breakout of a conflict in the Middle East provided significant volatility as well, specifically in March 2026, with the VIX climbing from below 20 on 2/27/26 before the conflict began to over 31 on 3/27/26 at its peak. The Fund was positive in both months, up +0.86% in October 2025, and +0.31% in March 2026. The portfolio management team's approach surrounding what it considers "binary" risk events helped to mitigate risk in both windows.

The supply shock stemming from the Middle East conflict appears likely to continue driving market uncertainty. Against this backdrop, the Fund will seek to continue generating uncorrelated absolute returns.
